Louise Lu, from Houston ISD's Bellaire High School, was not on the gridiron when she was named an NFL national champion a few days ago in Kansas City, Missouri. In fact, she wasn't even outdoors. But she was tops in the nation in Congressional Debate at the 2010 National Forensic League (NFL) National Tournament. Louise bested hundreds of other competitors in the category to earn the title.

Erik Nelson and Rohini Sigireddi earned 11th place in Public Forum Debate and John Williams advanced to the semifinals in Congressional Debate. The combined accomplishments of the four students, all from Bellaire High School, resulted in Bellaire Debate winning the 2010 NFL School of Excellence In Debate.

More than 3,200 students competed in the NFL national tournament, which is the world's largest academic contest. The NFL (National Forensic League) is celebrating its 85th anniversary this year.

In addition to winning the national championship, Louise brought home $6,000 in scholarships. Erik Nelson and Rohini Sigireddi earned $1,000 each in scholarships.

The Park Hill and North Kansas City school districts hosted the "Jazzin' it up in KC" national tournament, which drew visitors
